ANTHONY J. WATTS

In 1939 the battleship was still regarded as the prime naval unit with naval doctrine based upon the major Fleet action between opposing battleships. By 1943 air power had proved the vulnerability of the battleship and by the end of the war the battleships had been relegated to a very secondary role providing gunfire support for carrier forces and amphibious landings. Every class of battleship operated or planned by the major naval powers is listed, together with a short background to the design. Tables list technical data and a brief note of the fate.
